TAKE ACTION THIS OCTOBER

Clinical trial targets worst side-effects of breast cancer chemo

Delayed nausea and vomiting are awful side-effects of breast cancer chemotherapy. Now, Breast Cancer Foundation NZ has committed $250,000 to a new clinical trial that will test the ability of a cheap, widely available drug to prevent them.

The PantoCIN trial, led by medical oncologists Richard Isaacs and Navin Wewala from Palmerston North Hospital, will recruit 164 patients at up to nine hospitals around New Zealand.

BCFNZ chief executive Evangelia Henderson has thanked BCFNZ's generous supporters for making the trial possible. "Between half and 80 percent of patients suffer these side-effects," Mrs Henderson says. "If the trial achieves its main target, which is a complete absence of delayed nausea and vomiting for many patients, we'll be thrilled. At the very least, we're hoping for a big reduction."

Dr Isaacs says, "Nausea is rated as the most distressing side effect and vomiting the third most distressing by patients receiving chemotherapy. We're pretty good at treating immediate reactions, but delayed reactions, occurring from days two to five after chemo, can be underestimated by doctors. We're hoping this trial will provide an affordable, effective means of reducing these side effects."

When nausea takes over

One Auckland woman who suffered debilitating nausea during chemotherapy hopes the PantoCIN trial is successful for the sake of others like her.

Natasha Holland was diagnosed with HER2+ breast cancer early last year and endured a gruelling 20 weeks of chemo. Her nausea was so bad that at one stage she was on seven different types of anti-nausea drugs, but nothing worked.

"I tried everything – eating a little bit often; not eating; eating gingernuts; ginger ale; Chinese ginger lollies. I just ended up hating ginger."

Natasha and her husband have two children, aged just seven and 10 at the time. She set herself the goal of getting up each morning and walking her kids to the school bus. She often returned home and spent the whole day in bed before making the walk back to the bus stop after school.

Natasha Holland

"You really dig deep when you have children," she says. "I'd muster up everything I could to get there, and when I saw the happy look on the kids' faces, it was priceless."

"The last thing you want is for your kids to see you being poorly. I felt the best thing I could do for them was function as normally as possible - but it was really hard."

Natasha has her fingers crossed that the trial will mean patients have better options for nausea control in the future.

Advanced breast cancer patients need world class care

Our Advanced Breast Cancer report, 'I'm still here', has highlighted shocking failings in the New Zealand health system. Whether it's slow diagnosis, being pushed to the back of the queue for treatment or lack of access to new drugs, we have well and truly fallen behind other countries where advanced breast cancer patients are concerned.

The deficits in our system have become apparent thanks to data captured by our Breast Cancer Register. This has given us insights into patient treatment and outcomes that, until now, were inaccessible. Finally, thanks to Breast Cancer Foundation funding, we have a source of rich, reliable data that will help inform decision-making into the future.

It is horrifying to think that women with advanced breast cancer die much faster in New Zealand than in other comparable countries. This has to change. Urgent action must be taken by doctors, health boards and government – not next decade or next year, but right now.

We are pushing this message at all levels, demanding improvements. I will keep you posted.

Meanwhile, I'm excited to let you know about the innovative research projects that your generous donations have helped fund, from the PantoCIN anti-nausea trial to promising work in the area of breast cancer vaccines. This kind of science holds the key to breakthroughs we so desperately need.

Road to recovery made smoother via "hugely helpful" physiotherapy

Every year, your generous donations help fund individual PINC rehabilitation for women diagnosed with breast cancer, and Next Steps - group classes designed to help rebuild strength, flexibility and stamina.

So far this year, 300 women have benefited from Breast Cancer Foundation NZ funding these sessions. BCFNZ's chief executive, Evangelia Henderson, says she's delighted to know that women around New Zealand are receiving excellent rehabilitation support.

"Breast cancer surgery and drug treatment are physically and emotionally challenging. When patients are striving to regain control of their lives, physiotherapy can be a hugely positive first step in shifting someone's focus from illness to wellness," says Mrs Henderson.

"I would like to sincerely thank you for the opportunity to take part in the PINC rehabilitation programme. The physiotherapist is an amazing person, always giving support and encouragement when I was having treatment with her. The other ladies were great to be with and made the programme even more fun." - Lorraine, Hamilton

"I would not have been able to afford this treatment without going through financial difficulty so I am very appreciative. These sessions enabled me to have the right exercises after surgery so that my radiation treatment wasn't delayed too long. With much appreciation and thankfulness." - Rangipaeroa, Rotorua

"I cannot stress enough how hugely helpful these physiotherapy sessions were for me...As I'm unable to work, the reduction in cost was unbelievably helpful; I wouldn't have been able to go otherwise." - patient, Invercargill

Breast nurses to upskill at national meeting

Latest genomics research, innovative ways to work and insights into living and dying with advanced breast cancer are among topics being highlighted at a national breast nurse meeting in early September, hosted by BCFNZ.

"This is the first time in five years that breast nurses from around New Zealand have been able to gather to share knowledge," says BCFNZ nurse educator Kylie Tietjens.

Creating a forum for information-sharing and networking means that breast nurses, no matter where they work, will be up-to-date with the latest developments, equipping them to give the best possible care to patients. We're delighted that generous donors have made this possible.

Keynote speakers include a specialist lymphoedema physiotherapist, health psychologist, palliative care nurse practitioner and a breast screening representative.

BCFNZ's own expert speakers include breast cancer nurse consultant Melissa Warren and research manager Adele Gautier.

Simple and practical bags for patients well received

Your donations have helped BCFNZ provide newly-diagnosed patients across the country with attractive cotton bags containing vital information. The feedback has been glowing. Here's what the breast nurses have told us...

"The bags are great. My ladies are pleased to have a bag (that doesn't advertise breast cancer!) to pop all of their bits of information in." - Rotorua

"Received mine 3 weeks ago - so good and greatly appreciated in this scary journey." - Rachel, patient, Porirua

"The patients have very much appreciated them and we find them very useful too. A nice simple and practical design. Well done." - Auckland

Dear Nurse...

Question: My mum and aunt have both had breast cancer and I am concerned about my risk. What should I do?

Answer: It's a good first step to talk to your mum and aunt to find out more about your family's medical history.

Hereditary or inherited breast cancer can develop because of a gene mutation (alteration) that has been passed down through the family. If you have close relatives (such as your mum and aunt) with breast or ovarian cancer, you might need to be referred for genetic assessment. This kind of assessment will check to see if you have inherited any faulty genes such as the BRCA gene.

To find out if you qualify for assessment, talk to your GP, chat with our nurses on 0800 BC NURSE (0800 226 8773) or email breastnurse@bcf.org.nz

We discussed inherited risk in our August webinar. To watch it, head over to www.breastcancerfoundation.org.nz/webinars

BCFNZ is delighted to be the official charity for the NZ Flower & Garden Show. Organisers of NZ's premier garden design showcase are on a mission to rekindle our nation's love affair with gardening by reminding Kiwis that ANY DAY is a good day if you are lucky enough to be in the garden!

2018 sees the chance to enjoy some special hospitality options including a Pink Ribbon Spring Breakfast, a VIP Experience, VIP Lunch or even a Christmas Party Package.

The show runs from 28 November to 2 December at The Trusts Arena, Waitakere. Go to www.nzflowergardenshow.co.nz to purchase tickets or find out more.

Knitting legend knocks out 450 knitted knockers

Chris Finlayson is a knitter extraordinaire. Since 2015 she has produced more than 450 'knockers' from her favourite knitting possie, her armchair, complete with two doting cats giving feline encouragement.

Many women who've had mastectomies are grateful to receive a knitted prosthesis. They're light, warm and comfortable, and can even be worn while swimming.

Chris, 71, a retired dairy farmer, lives in Kamo, Whangarei, with her husband, Jock, who encouraged her to take up the cause. He sometimes takes on dinner duties when she needs to finish her work.

Chris says the knocker-knitting is quite addictive. She has arthritis and finds knitting is good for her hands, although she's had to switch to bamboo needles for comfort.

She and her cousin, also named Chris, are the only people she knows knitting knockers for Northland. The knockers are distributed via the breast clinic at Whangarei hospital. She knits them in a range of cup sizes (A, B, C, D and double-D - which take longer) and also knits to order.

She uses yarn that's 60% acrylic and 40% nylon, and stuffs each knocker with acrylic hobby fill. She started out doing white only, then produced some beige, and even added some coloured ones to her repertoire.

The knockers are warmly received by patients, some of whom have been without prostheses for many years.

Chris, herself a breast cancer survivor, works tirelessly in her community. Chris – you're a legend!
